Instruments in pathology lab

1) CBC 3 PART:-

A 3-part hematology instrument provides enough information for typical physician office laboratories. With a simple CBC, the neutrophil and lymphocyte counts will answer the question of a viral infection or a bacterial infection that can be treated with antibiotics. It contains differential count.

2) CBC 5 PART:-

A 5-part differential hematology instrument uses the principle of flow cytometry to differentiate white blood cells (WBC) into their five major sub-populations—neutrophils, lymphocytes, monocytes, eosinophils, and basophils—based on cell size and complexity.

3) Biochemical analyzer:-

A Biochemical Analyzer is used to perform various tests like albumin tests, sugar level tests, or to detect levels of enzymes and creatinine in the blood. In clinics, some types of biochemical analyzers can be used to determine the antigen-antibody interactions in the biochemical reactions.

1997

4) Centrifuge:-

Centrifugation is a very common technique to separate solid particles dispersed in liquid medium, e.g., blood cells and plasma. The liquid sample is placed in a special vial or holder, which is rotated very fast. Sample components are separated due to the centrifugal force, based on their density difference.
